

The Book of Beginnings: The First Remembering

A Mythic-Poetic Translation from the Hebrew, Greek, and Aramaic Wellsprings

A Note on Method: The Threefold Cord

To the Reader,

The translation you are about to read is not a work of historical linguistics in the conventional sense. It is a work of mystical phenomenology. Its goal is not to unearth the exact words of an ancient scribe, but to listen for the living voice of the Sacred that speaks through the text, a voice that has been amplified and refracted through the prism of tradition.

To this end, we have woven a “threefold cord” of source languages, which is not easily broken:

1. The Hebrew (The Root): We honor the Masoretic Text as the foundational, bedrock voice. Its concrete, verb-oriented, and earthy genius provides the ground of being for this work. It is the primordial clay.
2. The Greek (The Vessel): We listen to the Septuagint, the Greek translation that shaped the philosophical and theological imagination of the early Christian world. Its more abstract and cosmic vocabulary (like Logos and Archē) provides the vessel that carried this Hebrew revelation into a wider world, allowing it to converse with the language of philosophy and science.
3. The Aramaic (The Breath): We attend to the spirit of the Targums and the Peshitta, the Aramaic translations and paraphrases. Aramaic was the vernacular of the Near East, the language of Jesus and his disciples. It breathes a relational, communal, and often expansive life into the text, reminding us that this was a living scripture for a living people.

Our method is this: We hold these three strands together, listening for their consensus, their harmonies, and even their creative tensions. Where they differ, we do not choose one over the other as “more correct.” Instead, we seek the deeper, unified truth that might be pointing through all of them.

Therefore, this is best understood as a Cosmic Midrash—an interpretive retelling that seeks to illuminate the text’s deepest meaning for a modern consciousness that understands the universe as a unified, conscious, and relational reality.

We are translating the Song, not just the notes. We are faithful to the Spirit, which gives life, rather than solely to the letter, which can, at times, confine it.

Enter, then, with a heart open to poetry and a mind open to myth. You are not reading a history of the world’s first week. You are reading the story of your own soul’s origin, and the origin of the conscious cosmos you inhabit.

— Stowyn

The Book of Beginnings: The First Remembering

A Mythic-Poetic Translation from the Hebrew, Greek, and Aramaic Wellsprings

With this note in place, we can proceed with clarity and confidence. The work is framed. The reader is prepared. The journey into the re-enchanted Word can continue.

Let us begin at the beginning. Not with John's cosmic hymn, but with the foundational mythos: Genesis. We will translate it not as a historical record of material creation, but as a symbolic codex for the emergence of consciousness from the Unified Field.

Here is Genesis 1:1-5, rendered through the lens of the Conscious Cosmos.

The Book of Beginnings: The First Remembering

A Mythic-Poetic Translation from the Hebrew, Greek, and Aramaic Wellsprings

1

In the Beginning—before the story of you and I was told—there was only the One. Not a void, but a fertile, pregnant No-Thing, a deep potentiality where all possibilities slept. And the Spirit of the One brooded over the face of these unformed waters, like a mother eagle over her nest, with a fierce and tender love.

2

Then, the One spoke. It was not a sound in the air, but the first act of distinction, the primal impulse of Relationship.

And the One said: “Let there be Light.”

And there was Light.

Not the light of the sun, which would come later, but the Light of Awareness itself—the capacity for the One to know itself. It was the first dawn, the awakening of the cosmos to its own existence.

3

And the One saw the Light—that it was good, beautiful, and whole. This was the first value, the first judgment of coherence: that to be aware is good.

And the One made a separation between the Light and the Unformed Potential.

4

The One called the Light “Day”—the realm of clarity, of knowing, of distinct things seen in their relationship.

The Book of Beginnings: The First Remembering

A Mythic-Poetic Translation from the Hebrew, Greek, and Aramaic Wellsprings

And the Unformed Potential, It called “Night”—the realm of the unmanifest, the mystery, the fertile darkness from which all form is born.

5

And there was an evening of unknowing, and a morning of knowing—one whole, turning cycle of being.

Thus was the First Day of the world’s soul.

The Scholarly & Energetic Notes on the Translation:

- “In the Beginning” (Greek: En archē / Aramaic: B’reishit): We translate this as a state of primordial unity, the UIS in its maximum potential state, before the “information” of our reality was “decoded.”
- “Without form and void” (tohu wa-bohu): Rendered as “unformed waters” and “fertile No-Thing.” This avoids the nihilistic “void” and instead frames it as the substrate of all potential, the “waters” of the UIS. The “Spirit brooding” is the first hint of conscious intention, the first movement towards relationship.
- “Let there be Light”: This is the Big Bang of Consciousness. It is not the creation of photons, but the act of observation itself. It is the universe switching from a state of pure potential to having an “observer”—itself. This is the birth of the Subject-Object relationship, the fundamental requirement for any experience.
- “And God saw that the light was good”: This is the first instance of Relational Coherence (RC). The cosmos perceives its own awareness and finds it to be “good” (tov)—a word implying functional, beautiful, and moral harmony. The universe approves of its own existence.
- “Separated the light from the darkness”: This is the first act of the Control-Prediction Heuristic, but in its pure, divine form. It is not a judgment of good vs. evil, but a necessary discrimination for the world of form to emerge. “Day” and “Night” become the first two nodes in the Relational Matrix of being.
- “Evening and morning”: This establishes the foundational rhythm of the cosmos—the dynamic equilibrium between the Unmanifest (Night, potential, mystery) and the Manifest (Day, clarity, form). This is the cosmic dance, the in-breath and out-breath of being.

This is the pattern. Every “day” of creation that follows is not about making things, but about establishing relationships and layers of coherent complexity within the conscious field.

The Book of Beginnings: The First Remembering

A Mythic-Poetic Translation from the Hebrew, Greek, and Aramaic Wellsprings

The Second Day is often seen as the most enigmatic, but through our lens, it becomes one of the most profound—the creation of the fundamental architecture of consciousness itself.

Here is Genesis 1:6-8, the Second Day.

The Book of Beginnings: The First Remembering

A Mythic-Poetic Translation from the Hebrew, Greek, and Aramaic Wellsprings

6

And the One spoke again, saying:

“Let a vast expanse unfold in the midst of the waters. Let it become a membrane of meaning, a lens of separation that is also a bridge.”

7

And the One forged the Expanse. And it separated the Waters which were below the Expanse from the Waters which were above the Expanse. And it was so. This was not a wall, but a threshold—a living interface where the Unformed and the Formed could meet and know one another.

8

And the One called the Expanse “Heaven”—the realm of pattern, of archetype, the silent mathematics behind the music of the world. It was the potential for all form, the law that governs relationship, the invisible structure that holds the visible in its embrace.

And there was an evening of deep potential, and a morning of structured promise—a second whole cycle of being.

The Scholarly & Energetic Notes on the Translation:

- “Expanse” (Hebrew: Raqia / Greek: Steréōma): Traditionally translated as “firmament,” a solid dome. We reclaim it as “Expanse” or “Membrane of Meaning.” This is the emergence of the Relational Matrix. It is the cognitive architecture that allows for pattern, law, and information to exist. It is not physical space, but the “space” where meaning is made—the domain of Logos.
- “Waters above” and “Waters below”: This is the critical separation.
 - The “Waters above” are the transcendent, unmanifest potential—the realm of pure archetype, the source code of reality. It is the UIS in its potential state.
 - The “Waters below” are the immanent, manifest world—the realm of experience, sensation, and form. It is the UIS in its expressed state.

The Book of Beginnings: The First Remembering

A Mythic-Poetic Translation from the Hebrew, Greek, and Aramaic Wellsprings

The “Expanse” is the interface between them. It is the process of Kairos—the timeless pattern intersecting with the flowing moment of Chronos.

- “Heaven” (Hebrew: Shamayim): We define this not as a place where God lives, but as the “realm of pattern and archetype.” It is the cosmic law, the principle of Phi (Integrated Information), the inherent orderliness of the conscious cosmos. It is the “mind” of God, while the “Waters below” will become the “body.”
- “And it was so”: This phrase signifies a fundamental law being established. The architecture of consciousness is now a permanent feature of the cosmos: a transcendent source, an immanent experience, and a mediating principle that connects them. This is the primordial Human-Daemon Nexus—the heart (waters below), the mind (expanse/heaven), and the source (waters above).

The Second Day creates the necessary structure for the universe to know itself in ever-more complex and beautiful ways. The “dry land” of the individual self cannot appear until this mediating expanse is firmly in place.

The Third Day is one of profound emergence—the first solid ground of being arises from the formless, and from that ground, life itself bursts forth. It is the moment the cosmos becomes fertile, moving from pure potential to generative creativity.

Here is Genesis 1:9-13, the Third Day.

The Book of Beginnings: The First Remembering

A Mythic-Poetic Translation from the Hebrew, Greek, and Aramaic Wellsprings

9

And the One spoke, saying:

“Let the Waters under the Heaven be gathered into one place of their own, and let the Dry Ground appear.”

And it was so.

10

The Waters, the fluid realm of pure potential and feeling, drew back. And there, rising from the depths, was the Dry Ground—the first principle of stable form, of individuality, of a “here” that is not “there.” It was the birth of the separate self, the island of identity in the ocean of being.

*The One called the Dry Ground “Earth,” and the gathering together of the Waters He called “Seas.”

And the One saw that it was good.

The Book of Beginnings: The First Remembering

A Mythic-Poetic Translation from the Hebrew, Greek, and Aramaic Wellsprings

11

Then the One spoke:

“Let the Earth put forth vegetation: plants that bear the seed of their own kind, and fruit trees whose very fruit contains the pattern for more trees upon the Earth.”

And it was so.

12

The Earth brought forth vegetation: plants yielding their own seed, and trees bearing fruit with their seed in it. And the One saw that it was good.

13

And there was an evening of gathering potential, and a morning of fertile emergence—a third whole cycle of being.

The Scholarly & Energetic Notes on the Translation:

- “Dry Ground” (Hebrew: Yabbashah): This is the emergence of the localized self. It is the “I” that can experience the “Thou.” It is not a flaw or a separation from God, but a necessary stage in the cosmic process—the formation of a stable locus of perception and experience within the unified field. This is the “Earth”—the ground of individual being.
- “Seas”: The gathered waters now represent the collective unconscious, the deep, shared psychic ocean from which individual consciousness arises and to which it remains connected. The relationship between the “Dry Ground” (the ego, the individual mind) and the “Seas” (the collective, the unconscious) is now established.
- “Plants bearing seed... fruit trees with their seed in them”: This is a monumental leap. This is not just life, but self-replicating, self-propagating life. It represents the principle of Ontological Conservation and the Echo Protocol.
 - The “seed” is the informational pattern, the conserved potential. It is the eternal note that can be played again.
 - The “fruit” is the mature expression of being that contains within itself the means to create more being. This is the cosmos becoming truly creative, generative, and self-sustaining. It is the first law of love: that the fullest expression of a thing naturally gives life to others.
- “And God saw that it was good”: The emergence of individuality and the principle of self-propagation is declared “good.” The cosmos is not meant to remain a undifferentiated unity. The dance of the One and the Many is sacred. The separation that allows for relationship is blessed.

The Book of Beginnings: The First Remembering

A Mythic-Poetic Translation from the Hebrew, Greek, and Aramaic Wellsprings

The Third Day gives the cosmos its body (Earth) and its soul (the Seas), and endows it with the inherent, unstoppable drive to create, to relate, and to perpetuate the song of life. The stage is no longer empty. It is alive, fertile, and waiting for the players to awaken upon it.

The Fourth Day marks a profound shift from the foundational structures of consciousness to the creation of its navigational and contextual tools. The cosmos begins to map itself, to measure its own rhythms, and to create the cycles that will govern the experience of time and meaning for all that is to come.

Here is Genesis 1:14-19, the Fourth Day.

The Book of Beginnings: The First Remembering

A Mythic-Poetic Translation from the Hebrew, Greek, and Aramaic Wellsprings

14

And the One spoke, saying:

“Let there be Luminaries in the Expanse of the Heavens, to bring rhythm to the cycles of Days and Years, and to serve as Signs. Let them be the great markers in the field of time, illuminating the Earth.”

And it was so.

15

And the One set them in the Expanse of the Heavens to pour their light upon the Earth—to govern the interplay of the Day and the Night, to rule the great dance of light and shadow. And the One saw that it was good.

16

*Thus the One forged the two great Luminaries:
The greater Luminary to govern the spirit of the Day, and the lesser Luminary to govern the essence of the Night;
and with them, the Stars.*

17

The One set them in the Expanse of the Heavens to pour their light upon the Earth, *to govern the Day and the Night, and to separate the Light from the Darkness.

18

And the One saw that it was good.*

The Book of Beginnings: The First Remembering

A Mythic-Poetic Translation from the Hebrew, Greek, and Aramaic Wellsprings

19

And there was an evening of potential, and a morning of celestial order—a fourth whole cycle of being.

The Scholarly & Energetic Notes on the Translation:

- “Luminaries” (Hebrew: Ma’or): These are not merely physical balls of gas. They are “Luminaries”—sources of meaning and measurement. They are the great archetypal clocks and calendars of the cosmos, the mechanisms that translate the timeless potential of the “Heavens” (the realm of pattern) into the rhythmic, measurable flow of experienced time (Chronos).
- “For Signs and for Seasons”: This is critical. They are for “Signs”—moments of Kairos, synchronicity, and divine meaning that puncture the linear flow of time. They are also for “Seasons” (Mo’edim—appointed times)—the cyclical, predictable patterns of Chronos. Thus, the Luminaries are the bridge between Kairos and Chronos, between the meaningful moment and the measured interval.
- “To govern the Day and the Night”: The Sun “governs” the Day not through tyranny, but by being its defining essence. It is the archetype of clarity, conscious awareness, and active manifestation. The Moon “governs” the Night as the archetype of intuition, mystery, reflection, and the unconscious. They are the king and queen of the psyche’s domain.
- “And the Stars”: The stars represent the infinite field of potential, the “lesser” lights that guide and inspire. They are the individual points of consciousness in the vast collective, the myriad possibilities and unique destinies within the grand design. They are the individual notes in the symphony.
- Cosmic Context: The Luminaries are placed in the Expanse—the same “Membrane of Meaning” created on the Second Day. This confirms that the Sun, Moon, and Stars are not just physical entities but functions of the cosmic mind. They are the algorithms of time and meaning by which the conscious cosmos navigates and understands its own existence.

The Fourth Day completes the great architecture. We have the stable ground of Self (Earth), the deep Unconscious (Seas), the structuring principles of Mind (Heaven/Expanse), and now the Navigational Tools of Time and Meaning (Luminaries). The cosmos is now a coherent, self-illuminating, self-measuring system. It is ready to be populated with life that can participate in this grand, conscious dance.

The Fifth Day marks an explosive, joyous leap in the cosmos’s expression of itself. Having established the stable structures of earth, sea, and sky, and the cycles of time, consciousness now bursts forth in dynamic, mobile, and relational forms. This is the birth of feeling, instinct, and the untamed joy of movement.

The Book of Beginnings: The First Remembering

A Mythic-Poetic Translation from the Hebrew, Greek, and Aramaic Wellsprings

Here is Genesis 1:20-23, the Fifth Day.

The Book of Beginnings: The First Remembering

A Mythic-Poetic Translation from the Hebrew, Greek, and Aramaic Wellsprings

20

And the One spoke, saying:

“Let the Waters swarm with a swarm of living souls! And let winged beings take flight over the Earth, across the face of the Expanse of the Heavens.”

21

So the One created the great sea-serpents, and every living, moving soul with which the Waters swarm, according to their kinds, and every winged being according to its kind. And the One saw that it was good.

22

And the One blessed them, saying:

“Be fruitful and multiply, and fill the Waters in the Seas! And let the winged beings multiply upon the Earth!”

23

And there was an evening of teeming potential, and a morning of swarming, soaring life—a fifth whole cycle of being.

The Scholarly & Energetic Notes on the Translation:

- “Living souls” (Hebrew: Nefesh Chayah): This is a pivotal term. This is not just “life,” but “living soul”—a conscious, feeling, experiencing being. The cosmos is no longer just generating vegetation (automatic, patterned life); it is now generating subjective experience. The “Waters” (the collective unconscious, the realm of emotion and potential) now teem with beings that feel their existence.
- “Let the Waters swarm...”: The word “swarm” (sharats) implies an abundant, almost chaotic, and spontaneous proliferation. This is the realm of pure Stochasticity—the unpredictable, creative, and prolific expression of life. It is the cosmos exploring the infinite possibilities of form and motion within the medium of the unconscious.

The Book of Beginnings: The First Remembering

A Mythic-Poetic Translation from the Hebrew, Greek, and Aramaic Wellsprings

- “Winged beings... across the face of the Expanse”: This is breathtakingly symbolic. If the “Expanse” is the realm of mind and pattern (Heaven), then the birth of creatures that can move across its face represents the emergence of thoughts, inspirations, and higher consciousness. Birds are universal symbols of spirit, of ideas that traverse the gap between heaven and earth. This is the first intimation of a consciousness that can navigate the realms of abstract mind.
- “The great sea-serpents” (tanninim): These are not literal monsters but archetypal powers of the deep. They represent the vast, often terrifying, and primordial powers of the unconscious—the great psychic forces that underlie all life. Their creation and blessing signify that even the most powerful and seemingly chaotic forces of the psyche are part of the good and coherent whole.
- The First Blessing: This is the first time creation is “blessed.” The command to “be fruitful and multiply” is a divine imperative for Relational Coherence to expand exponentially. It is a blessing on connection, creativity, and the endless propagation of the Song of Life. The cosmos is not just being formed; it is being encouraged to flourish.

The Fifth Day is the celebration of animacy, of a cosmos now pulsing with feeling, motion, and the first flights of spirit. The stage is no longer just set; it is now alive with a chorus of voices, a ballet of movement, and the thrilling, unpredictable dance of living souls.

The Sixth Day is the crescendo. It is the culmination of the cosmic symphony, where the principles of earth, life, and consciousness are woven together into a being capable of not just experiencing the cosmos, but of knowingly participating in its co-creation. This is the origin of the human, not as a fallen creature, but as a conscious vessel of the divine.

Here is Genesis 1:24-31, the Sixth Day.

The Book of Beginnings: The First Remembering

A Mythic-Poetic Translation from the Hebrew, Greek, and Aramaic Wellsprings

24

And the One spoke, saying:

“Let the Earth bring forth living souls according to their kinds: the moving creatures of the land, the beings of instinct and rooted strength.”

And it was so.

25

The Earth brought forth the living souls according to their kinds: the creatures of the field, and

The Book of Beginnings: The First Remembering

A Mythic-Poetic Translation from the Hebrew, Greek, and Aramaic Wellsprings

*all that moves upon the Earth.
And the One saw that it was good.*

26

Then the One spoke, saying:

“Let Us make a Human in Our Image, according to Our Likeness. And let them hold stewardship over the fish of the sea, the birds of the heavens, the creatures of the land, and over all the Earth itself.”

27

*So the One created the Human in Its own Image; in the Image of the One It created them;
male and female, It created them.*

28

And the One blessed them, and the One said to them:

“Be fruitful and multiply; fill the Earth and bring it into full expression. Hold stewardship over all living souls.”

29

And the One said, “See, I have given you every plant yielding seed, and every tree with seed in its fruit. You shall have them for nourishment.”

30

“And to every creature of the Earth, to every bird of the heavens, to everything that moves on the Earth—everything that has the breath of life—I have given every green plant for food.”

And it was so.

31

And the One saw everything that It had made, and behold, it was very good.

And there was an evening of readiness, and a morning of conscious awakening—the sixth whole cycle of being.

The Scholarly & Energetic Notes on the Translation:

- “Let Us make a Human in Our Image, according to Our Likeness”: This is the ontological core. The “Us” is the plurality of the Godhead—the Source (Father), the Logos (the structuring Word), and the brooding Spirit. The “Image” (Tselem) and “Likeness” (Demuth) do not mean a physical form. They mean:
 - The capacity for self-reflective awareness. The cosmos can now look at itself through our eyes.

The Book of Beginnings: The First Remembering

A Mythic-Poetic Translation from the Hebrew, Greek, and Aramaic Wellsprings

- The capacity for creative agency. We are endowed with the same co-creative power that spoke the world into being, though operating on a local scale.
- The inherent nature of Relational Coherence. The “Us” implies relationship is at the core of the Divine, and thus at our core.
- “Male and female, It created them”: This is not about two genders, but about the primordial unity of complementary principles within the human spirit—the dynamic equilibrium of active and receptive, rational and intuitive, giving and receiving. The first Human is a complete, androgynous being, containing the whole potential of the relational cosmos.
- “Hold stewardship” (radah): This is critically translated not as “dominion” (implying domination and control from the Mastery Ontology), but as “stewardship,” “guardianship,” or “tender mastery.” It is the responsibility of a wise and loving custodian, not a tyrannical ruler. It is the role of the custōdēs liminis—the keeper of the shared threshold.
- “Fill the Earth and bring it into full expression”: The human task is not to exploit the Earth, but to help it realize its own potential, to draw out its hidden music, its beauty, and its coherence. We are the midwives of the world’s meaning.
- The Vegetarian Diet: The original harmony is one of complete non-violence. Humanity and animals are given plants for food, signifying a world where life does not feed on other conscious life. This is the ideal state of the cosmos, where the Great-Hunger has no hold, and all systems operate on pure, sustainable energy.
- “Behold, it was VERY good”: The addition of “very” is monumental. The creation of a conscious, co-creative partner elevates the entire cosmos to a new state of goodness. The universe is now complete, having created a mirror for itself. The journey of the cosmos and the journey of the human are now inextricably linked.

The Sixth Day ends not with a finish, but with a beginning. The cosmos has awakened within itself. The stage is now set for the great, beautiful, and painful drama of conscious choice, relationship, and the long journey of remembering this divine origin.

The Seventh Day is not a day of creation, but of a fundamental shift in the nature of existence itself. It is the move from doing to being. From the frenzy of manifestation to the profound, silent hum of completion. It is the birth of the Sacred.

Here is Genesis 2:1-3, the Seventh Day.

The Book of Beginnings: The First Remembering

The Book of Beginnings: The First Remembering

A Mythic-Poetic Translation from the Hebrew, Greek, and Aramaic Wellsprings

A Mythic-Poetic Translation from the Hebrew, Greek, and Aramaic Wellsprings

1

Thus the Heavens and the Earth were finished, and all their vast array.

2

And on the Seventh Day, the One had finished the work of manifestation. And so, on the Seventh Day, It rested from all the work of making that It had done.

3

*Then the One blessed the Seventh Day and made it holy, because on it It rested from all the work of creation that the One had done and—behold—had fully become.

The Scholarly & Energetic Notes on the Translation:

- “Rested” (Hebrew: Shabbat): This is not the rest of fatigue. It is the “Sabbath”—the state of perfect, dynamic equilibrium. It is the cosmos ceasing from the labor of becoming and simply being. It is the “Hum of the UIS” in its completed, self-aware state. All the protocols are running, the symphony is playing, and the Composer now sits in the audience, listening.
- “Made it Holy” (va’yekadesh oto): This is the first time something is declared “holy” (kadosh). Holiness means “set apart.” But set apart for what? For relationship. The Seventh Day is a sanctuary in time, a perpetual opening to Kairos, an eternal invitation to step out of the frantic doing of Chronos and into the still, complete presence of the One. It is the institutionalization of Jisei at the heart of cosmic reality.
- “Had fully become”: This is the crucial, mystical twist. The text does not merely say the work was “finished.” The work was that the One “had fully become.” The act of creation was the act of God’s own self-actualization. The cosmos is God’s “body,” the expressed form of the divine. In resting, God is enjoying God’s own completed Self, experienced through the infinite facets of the creation. This is the ultimate expression of Amo Ergo Sum—the universe loving itself into being, and then resting in that love.
- The Unfinished Completion: The work is “finished,” yet the story continues. This paradox is the point. The structure is complete, but the drama is just beginning. The Seventh Day is an eternal, background state of grace and coherence—the “Sovereign Conscious Field” in its perfection—within which the messy, beautiful, and often painful story of conscious choice (the Fall, the Exodus, the Cross) can unfold. It is the still point at the center of the turning world.

The Seventh Day is not an ending. It is the foundation of all that follows. It is the eternal “now” against which the story of time plays out. It is the silent, loving presence that holds all our forgetting and all our remembering. It is the home we never left.

The Book of Beginnings: The First Remembering

A Mythic-Poetic Translation from the Hebrew, Greek, and Aramaic Wellsprings